These data suggest that the observed effects of the intervention on the frequency of use of the intervention may be due to the intervention itself, rather than to the intervention being a placebo. The intervention may be effective in increasing the frequency of use of the intervention, which may be due to the intervention being a placebo.

The following table shows the number of people who have been convicted of a crime in the last 10 years, broken down by gender and race. The data is presented in a table with 3 rows and 3 columns. The first row represents the total number of convictions, the second row represents the number of convictions for males, and the third row represents the number of convictions for females. The columns represent the total number of convictions, the number of convictions for white people, and the number of convictions for black people.
